TO THE MEMORY OF

Mr. THOMAS MITCHELL,

Twenty-Three Years a School-Master

in the Parish of Hampstead,

WHO DIED THE 10th DAY OF APRIL, 1799,

IN THE XLVIIIth YEAR OF HIS AGE,

MUCH LAMENTED BY ALL WHO KNEW HIM.

HE was a Man of real Merit,
Sound Judgement, deep Penetration,
and strict Integrity :

A true Patriot, and the Poor Man's Friend.

His unremitted Application to Geography, Astronomy, and the Sciences in general, rendered him

A refined Scholar, and a most pleasant Companion.

His philanthropic Labours for the Public Good

Will perpetuate his Name, and remain as lasting Monuments of his Genius.

The Poor in general were his peculiar Care; in him they always found a real Friend and successful Advocate.

He was the Founder of the SUNDAY SCHOOL of this Parish;
and with great Application and Attention to its Interests, has left it supported on a firm Basis.

Oh! Reader, imitate this worthy, virtuous Man,
And make his Motto yours,—“ Do all the Good you can.”
Power, Wealth, and Beauty are a short-liv'd Truſt,
'Tis Virtue only bloſſoms in the Duſt.
